Étude IV.

(1) This Study is a remarkable example of modern arrangement. The notation remains almost as in the original (one staff), only the figure has been made pianistic by interlocking: the hands.— The spirit of the original is so true in this piece, that, on hearing it, we are vividly reminded of bowings on the violin.

This Etude requires great lightness of execution and, throughout, the nun legato touch corresponding to the springender Bagen on the violin. Care should be taken to emphasize slightly the progressing lower notes of the arpeggio, in order to recall the effect of the "down-bow" (\square) in similar figures over the four strings.
